

Dr. Nasim Mahmoudi

INTERNAL MEDICINE, LION'S GATE

Dr. Mahmoudi is currently the Division Head of Internal Medicine at Lion's Gate Hospital (LGH). She received her undergraduate medical degree and residency training in Internal Medicine at Shiraz University in Iran, before moving to Vancouver with her husband and son in 2001.

Dr. Mahmoudi has been practicing at LGH since the completion of her General Internal Medicine training at UBC in 2008. She is passionate about teaching and is actively involved in the residency program as a UBC Clinical Assistant Professor. She oversees senior residents during their community Internal Medicine rotations, and also works at the Clinical Teaching Unit at Vancouver General Hospital.

Her interest in leadership and commitment to the hospital led Dr. Mahmoudi to serve as Vice President and President of the Medical Staff Association at LGH from 2015 to 2017 – truly inspiring!

What advice do you wish you'd had at the start of your career?

"I wish I knew that others starting out their careers in medicine were just as nervous as I was. That the learning curve to becoming an independent, community-based specialist was steep, and that with practice and experience comes confidence."
